What you can do if you discover your child or young person is self-harming

Stay calm and avoid judging your child, even if you are upset. Be supportive.

- Understand that your child is often self-harming to manage emotions and/or to communicate distress - they may want you to notice the self-harm so that non-verbal communication of distress is received.
- Listen and talk to your child and try to understand what is prompting the behaviour. Be empathic and non-judgemental.
- Convey to your child that you want to understand their difficulties and support your child to find new ways of coping.
- Try to remove the temptation of self-harm, if possible, by encouraging your child to avoid situations in which they could self-harm.
- Help your child think about why they are self-harming by asking if there is anything that can be done about the cause or if something else needs to change to make things better for the child.
- Make a list of people your child can talk to such as you or your partner, other relatives, a teacher, or friends of the family.
- Depending on your child's age, encourage talking about feelings; writing them down; drawing them; breathing exercises, or physical activity as a way to relieve stress and anxiety.
- If your child's behaviour is not changing or if you suspect they might be depressed, ask your doctor for advice. Depression and anxiety can be treated in many ways.
